

Anger Simplified

Threat creates a neurochemical inflammatory reaction (anxiety)

And a need for control to escape threat

When you are trapped (loss control)

Your body increases the stress response in an effort to regain control

You are now angry

Anger = turbocharged anxiety

Neither one is subject to rational interventions